

After the victory over the Jundari Trading Routes and a massive retreat of the Andesite parasitic influence, the Trionittes wasted no time pushing them back further into the unknown and uncharted galaxy space. The Empire along with her allies managed to punch through almost every Andesitic advancement, destroying and recapturing lost territories. In the span of 4 months, the Empire managed to retake the Qeuo Systems and increased its defences while having a joint force between the Imperial Knights and the newly banded coalition of different planetary defences otherwise known as the CDPD which was entirely made up of the allied forces' own planetary forces. Due to this, the Imperial Knights gained many insights into the large combinations of tactics that can be combined based on the different planetary approaches. The Imperial Knights used this to their advantage, pursuing scattered Andesites with ease. A knight captain called, Maywar Yulrek, led a brave infiltration of the Andesite hive. During this infiltration, she had her remaining forces create a massive diversion by attacking the Parasite's warrior nest. During this attack, Maywar and her team of elite infiltrators managed to get themselves deep within the hive and to their horror, they encountered, for the first time in galactic history, an Andesite Queen the size of a light space cruiser. The nightmares do not stop there. They saw the captured men and women of war as forcefully transformed into Andesite lesser warriors and workers as an act of desperation. With the sight of disgust and horror, they braved through all of it and managed to confront the Queen herself.

Written by Mr Avocado

An epic yet gruesome battle was set in motion between the Knights and the CDPD Elites against the Queen and her Praetorian Guardians. Blood was spilling from both sides, weapons blazing, walls crushing. Limbs are torn apart. Maywar barely managed to evade a swing from a Praetorian which would have taken a toll on her life by literally being split into two. After successfully jumping away, she immediately got back on her foot ready for another fight. "DUCK!" a shouting voice came from one of the CDPD members who threw a grenade which devastated two Praetorians. The fight further progressed the transformation of the captured prisoners. The screams and begging to be killed were yelled out by each and every one of the slaves and prisoners as they were transformed alive, having to feel their skin being peeled away by the parasites that soon took over their minds and bodies. Maywar commanded her Knights to burn any Transformed while saving as many slaves and prisoners as they can, which they managed to deal with. Meanwhile, her attention was shifted towards the Queen as she yelped out a loud screech, calling all of her hives back to her. "COMMANDER, NOW!" Maywar yelled. A CDPD veteran who joined the infiltration unit known as Commander Jalto, shoved a Zytron Matter Disposer onto the ground creating a shockwave which disrupts the ground, killing all the incoming hive waves but not without a cost in return.

Written by Mr Avocado

The ground underneath them began to shake and cracked before breaking apart not long after tumbling all of them down into the ground below. Now Maywar was trapped with the Queen in a dark atmosphere. In the nick of time, the Queen made a silent strike, killing three CDPD commandos in one collateral swing using the sharp end of her leg claws before forwarding her attention towards Maywar. She looked at her side and found that her weapon was not on her belt. She glanced over and saw her Honor Guard weapon was behind the Queen. Maywar took a deep breath and calmed her mind while the Queen screeches at her.

"Empress, give me strength," she uttered under her breath before starting to skip forward and began to sprint towards the Queen. On her way sprinting towards the Queen, her mind was calm as the river flow, untainted by the death of her peers and fallen comrades, her mind was clear as day and her heart was filled with rage and anger which was channelled to her strength and properly controlled by her wisdom and experience. As she was close enough to the Queen, she jumped as the Queen lashed out a mauling attack which she evaded in time by jumping over the queen and spinning before landing safely behind the Queen and tackling her weapon back up igniting it full of its blazing fury. She hit her weapon onto the ground creating a clanking sound before running back towards the Queen, evading and deflecting left and right before managing to shank one of the Queen's knees and using it to leap forward above her head. As she was landing on the Queen's head, she used all of her strength to impale the Queen's head straight through her frontal cortex and coming out from the back of her neck. She thrusts her blade back and forth ensuring the Queen's swift death.

Written by Mr Avocado

Little to her knowledge, the Queen impaled Maywar in her spinal cords. In a flash, she saw a vision, a memory or rather... a plan from the Queen herself. A planet, rich in green, with excessive access to clean water, and a toxic-free air supply, all of which was corrupted and terraformed into another Andesite Parasitic Empire which could devastate the galaxy once more. All of the visions seemed so real that Maywar felt the pain and cries of the people in the vision. The vision ended shortly after the Queen expires. The hive screeches in the mourning of their fallen Queen. Maywar was dropped to the ground slammed over by the force of the Queen's corpse. She briefly fainted in and out of consciousness as she was lying there bleeding. She looked to her left, seeing the lifeless Queen in her soulless eyes. She saw a single tear coming out of it, the short bond she had with the Queen quickly made her realize that the late Queen isn't like her predecessors. The late Queen wanted something else for her and her subjects, a peaceful life away from the war and away from any civilizations. Before she passes out, she heard a beautiful voice speaking in her head saying; "Guide them, and they will forever be grateful".

Maywar wakes up in a friendly medical bay, accompanied by the remaining surviving members of her infiltrators. Sitting next to her, a close friend was waiting, worried to death. She spoke out a greeting to which she was met with a hug from her and cheered others in the background. The cheerful mood however was interrupted as the medical bay doors slides open and walked into the Chosen Eight. "All of them at once..?" one of the survivors whispered at each other as for to even having a sight of one of the Chosen Wills was considered a miracle let alone all eight in one room. "Honor Guard Captain Maywar Yulrek!" barked the Third Chosen. Maywar was speechless and nervous at best at the sound of her name being said by a Chosen. "The Empress wants to congratulate you herself for your brave efforts in pushing us closer to ending the war. She demands an audience with you." informed the Fifth Chosen. This brightens her spirit and still, she can not grasp the fact that she managed to perform what she did. She was ready, she was Trionitte, and now... she is reborn.